

Author Bio

A. Wilding Wells was raised on a gentleman's farm in Wisconsin. Deciding to skip college, she instead took her lanky self to Paris to model. After traipsing about the world for two years, she returned to the U.S., met the man of her dreams and in 1991 married, moved back to rural Wisconsin and started a business designing furniture. On her 21-acre farm, she added inspiration to her day-to-day with a flock of sheep, a horse named Judgment Day, geese, chickens, goats and a miniature donkey. In 2010, she, her husband and their four young boys moved to California to escape the chilly Midwestern winters. They now live on a ranch with a menagerie of animals so vast it could sink an arc. In 2014, on a whim, she wrote a romance novel and fell head over heels in love with dreaming up other worlds. A voracious reader and researcher, she is looking forward to writing for years to come.